

YESTERMORROW DESIGN/BUILD SCHOOL

ANNUAL REPORT

2022-23

LETTER FROM THE EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

How do you measure impact? The past couple of years forced Yestermorrow, along with many non-profits, to re-examine our impact. In Yestermorrow's case, our impact is measured by the students enrolled in courses and programs, and how they put that experience to use in the world.

Understanding our impact helps us to work through adversity (like a pandemic) Yestermorrow makes an impact because Students attend; Instructors teach; and Donors give generously (and, of course, our Staff and Board work very hard!)

In examining our impact, our priority is that our students and community are encouraged to think with their hands. When we inspire students in the building trades they go on to create beautiful, sustainable designs in landscapes, buildings, and furniture and thus they make their homes, and our planet, a better place to live. We want them to leave here with the confidence to make a career change they may have been wanting to take, start a new hobby, or follow a dream. We hope they learn skills and best practices, and to teach others the same. We hope we inspire our students to establish their own sets of principles to guide their designs and builds.

We could not achieve these goals without the help of our donors. Scholarship funding gives access to our programs. Donations help us pilot new programs, fund new projects that expand our possibilities and house our students in new and better lodging options.

Looking ahead, Yestermorrow will be gathering input from alumni to better gauge the impact that we have had. We want to demonstrate how Yestermorrow helps bring about change for our planet, and fulfills our students. That is the impact of our donors, and we will be proud to tell those stories.

Britton Rogers
Executive Director

PROJECT SPOTLIGHT

TIMBER FRAMING + ADVANCED TIMBER FRAMING

In the summer of 2023, Yestermorrow students embarked on a timber framing journey to construct our friend Eddie Merma's home. Over the span of a couple of weeks, these two classes learned the techniques and methods necessary to raise a timber frame structure.

The project got kicked off with prep from our Timber Framing course and was finished by students in Advanced Timber Framing. We don't always have the chance to teach with large scale projects like this, so the team was thrilled for the opportunity to work on Eddie's home.

INSTRUCTOR SPOTLIGHT

THEA ALVIN

Stonemason, Designer,
Artist

Thea Alvin is a stone mason and sculptor specializing in arch construction, large-scale sculptural installation, stone building, and, most recently, stained glass, building on her unique style and perspective of stonework, design, installation, team leadership and teaching in the trades. Alvin has been a stone mason since 1986 and sculptor since 1998. First apprenticing seven years under master masons, then branching out to study stonework internationally in England, Canada, Italy, China and Mexico.

The Art of Stone, Build a
Masonry Oven

Thea is the owner of a dual focus building construction and sculpture design and installation company called My Earthwork.

She lives on her 1810 restored farm in Northern Vermont with two dogs, nine goats, seven fish and thirty-something chickens. The farm has seen countless courses and workshops to complete the restoration process and is now a sculpture park, open by appointment

But it is our goal to make it so every person that wants to learn at Yestermorrow has the opportunity to do so. Through assistance in the form of scholarships and sliding scale tuition, we are able to provide many with the chance to attend.

Thanks to generous donors we can give even more students the opportunity to come to Yestermorrow and think with their hands.

THANK YOU!
